ECTS	8
Semester	Winter and summer semester
Lecturers	Ratko Brnabić, PhD, Associate Professor Marko Ivkošić, PhD, Associate Professor
Course description	General and specific knowledge of the Croatian commercial law system. Commercial law in the Republic of Croatia regulates the rules and norms of business relations between commercial entities, focussing on the conclusion and execution of contracts and the management of securities and industrial property. Below you will find an overview of the most important aspects: 1. Formation of contracts Offer and acceptance: A contract is concluded when one party submits an offer and the other party accepts it in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Obligations Act (Zakon o obveznim odnosima - ZOO).

	Formal requirements: Commercial contracts generally do not require strict formalities, unless required by law (e.g. written form for real estate contracts). Legal effect: A contract becomes effective as soon as the parties have agreed on the essential elements. 2. Contract interpretation Principles: Contracts should be interpreted based on the actual intent of the parties and not just the literal meaning of the terms. Customs and practises: The customs and practises of a particular industry may be helpful in interpretation. Provisions of the ZOO: In cases of ambiguity, contractual clauses are interpreted in favour of the party that did not propose them. 3. Modification of contractual clauses Mutual consent: A contract can only be amended with the consent of both parties, unless the law provides otherwise. Exceptional circumstances: In the event of changed circumstances (rebus sic stantibus clause), the parties may request an amendment or termination of the contract. 4. Termination of the contractual relationship 5. Securities law 6. Industrial property rights Protection: This includes patents, trademarks, industrial designs and geographical indications. The procedure for protection is administered by the State Office for Intellectual Property (Državni zavod za intelektualno vlasništvo - DZIV). Licencing: A rights holder can grant third parties the right to use their property through licence agreements. Infringement of rights: Infringements of industrial property rights can lead to claims for damages and other legal sanctions.

Course name	JUDICIAL REASONING AND JUDGE MADE LAW
Course code	PR5SRS
Study Year	5
ECTS	6
Semester	Summer semester
Lecturers	Žaklina Harašić, Ph.D., Full Professor Marin Keršić, Ph.D., Assistant Professor
Course Description	When judges pass judgements, they interpret legal norms, that is, they argue. Sometimes a less complex interpretation is required and their judgements are referred to as simple cases. In some cases, decision-making requires a more complex interpretation – these are the so-called hard cases. Judges use arguments such as argument a contrario, argument a simili, argument a fortiori, argument acohaerentia, argument a completudine, argument rerum natura, argument ababsurdum, etc. As far as the role of the judge and the significance of the judgement are concerned, we distinguish between two major legal systems: The Anglo-American and the European-Continental. In the first system, the so-called precedents play a special role, in the second system the decisions that form the so-called court practise. Today, court practise is increasingly referred to as precedents. The reference to court decisions is referred to as an authority argument. The use of the authority argument is also referred to as a reference to the opinions of legal scholars.

The aim of this course is to give students an overview of the special features of the position of juveniles in criminal legislation. Using the most important legal texts from a specific period, students will learn about the development of the position of children in criminal legislation. National legislation regulating the position of juveniles is highly influenced by the standards set out in international documents of various international organisations such as the UN, the Council of Europe and the EU, which aim to ensure child-friendly justice. Therefore, the course will introduce students to the content of international documents such as the Beijing Rules, the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, the EU Directive 800/2016 on procedural safeguards for children suspected or accused in criminal proceedings and the case law of the ECtHR. The largest part of the subject is dedicated to the current legal solution in the Republic of Croatia and its application in practise. Croatia regulates the position of juveniles in the Juvenile Courts Act (YCA) (Official Gazette 84/11, 84/2011, 143/2012, 148/2013, 56/2015, 126/2019), which is considered lex specialis . The YCA contains many progressive solutions, which are clearly reflected in the provisions on sanctions for juveniles, the application of the principle of expediency and the special features of criminal proceedings against juvenile offenders. The law specifically regulates the substantive and procedural status of young adults (18-21 years of age) and contains provisions on the criminal protection of children as victims of certain types of offences. During the course, students will compare the positive Croatian legislation with comparative legal solutions, the current state of juvenile delinquency in Croatia, analysis of interesting cases from judicial practise and the latest trends in the development of juvenile criminal law.
